GLF SUMMARY 2021

Helping Leaders Govern

The Global Leadership Foundation

A global network of former national leaders offering private, discreet advice to current Heads of Government.

Supports effective political leadership and good governance.

An independent, not-for-profit organisation registered in Switzerland, founded in 2004 by Nobel Laureate FW de Klerk.

Mission

GLF exists to support political leadership and good governance around the world by making available the experience of former leaders to today's national leaders. GLF works discreetly and in confidence.

Short description

GLF is a network built around its 45 Members, all former Heads of State or Government or other distinguished leaders with first-hand experience of the difficulties of political leadership. Its Members contribute to the work of GLF as private individuals, motivated by a desire to help current leaders tackle challenges that they themselves once faced. Avoiding the spotlight, GLF Members typically work in small teams to give frank and private advice on specific issues of concern to Heads of Government and on general governance issues.

GLF's approach is defined by strict confidentiality. This approach bypasses protocol, ensures privacy, facilitates the establishment of a relationship of trust, and ensures that if a leader is helped to take a successful initiative, he or she can assume the credit for it, strengthening and reinforcing his or her credibility.

Context

While changes in governments can bring fresh hope to their peoples, especially those recently affected by internal revolt, leaders working to develop democratic institutions, free markets and the rule of law may often benefit from the advice of former leaders who themselves experienced similar challenges.

GLF comes with no agenda of its own, or of any government or organization. It is a not-for-profit Foundation and its Members no longer seek high office. The agenda is always set by the Head of Government, with GLF Members acting as personal, private advisors, offering impartial advice, given on a peer-to-peer basis, drawing on their own personal experience.

What kind of projects does GLF undertake?

GLF will consider requests from any government that is committed to, or aspires to, the principles of democratic institutions, human rights, open markets and the rule of law. Since its establishment in 2004, GLF has made a definable difference in over two dozen countries through its work on inter alia:

- Regional security
- Security sector modernisation
- Confronting a terrorist organization and release of hostages
- Negotiating with armed resistance movements
- Political reconciliation and implementation of international agreements
- Elections
- Trade and Economic reform
- Resource Management
- Development of democratic institutions and effective governance
- Access for humanitarian aid
- Transition from authoritarian rule

When specialist technical advice is required, such as in business, banking and finance; the development and exploitation of power generation, mining and agricultural resources; or the adaptation to new technologies, GLF can mobilise outside expertise, drawing on its extensive network of partners supporters. Through its projects GLF has developed good relations with the World Bank, IMF, UNDP and many like-minded non-governmental organisations (NGOs) in the governance and conflict management field.

Operating Principles

Each project is different. GLF can act on its own initiative, at the invitation of a host government needing advice, at the suggestion of another government, or in partnership with a UN body, international financial institution or like-minded NGO.

The Foundation's core principles are discretion, trust, integrity, neutrality and independence, and it will only engage with opposition parties if requested to do so by a Head of Government.

GLF will not publicize the countries in which it operates unless a leader with whom it is working wishes to make GLF's involvement public.

How is GLF financed?

GLF is a non-profit, independent foundation, funded by corporations, foundations and private individuals. Those who donate above a minimum level are invited to join the GLF International Council. Members of the International Council can be as active as they wish; the group does not meet formally nor make collective decisions but may be consulted individually, on an occasional basis, by the CEO and Projects Director of GLF. Members of the International Council are invited to participate in GLF's Annual Meetings where they are actively encouraged to contribute their specialist knowledge to the Foundation's strategic direction, to share best case practice from the private sector, and to participate in the discussions on how GLF might contribute to the solution of complex problems in various countries.

GLF exercises careful judgement to ensure that it does not receive funds from any source likely to be considered damaging to its reputation for probity or its need to preserve the confidentiality and objectivity of its operations. To further preserve its independence GLF only accepts support from any one source of no more than 10% of its operating budget in any one year.

GLF seeks to recover direct project costs from its host and has in the past received project funding from UNDP and the governments of Canada, Ireland, Finland and Switzerland.
