Helping Leaders Govern

Overview

A global network of former senior governmental leaders offering private, discreet advice to current Heads of Government.

Supports effective political leadership and good governance.

An independent, not-for-profit organisation registered in Switzerland, founded in 2004 by Nobel Laureate FW de Klerk.

Mission

GLF exists to support political leadership and good governance by making available the experience of former leaders to today's national leaders. GLF works discreetly and in confidence.

Description

GLF is a network built around its 44 Members, all former Heads of State or Government or other distinguished leaders with first-hand experience of the difficulties of political leadership. Members contribute as private individuals, motivated by a desire to help current leaders tackle challenges similar to those they once faced.

Avoiding the spotlight, Members typically work in small teams to give private and objective advice on specific issues of concern to Heads of Government. GLF's approach is based on strict confidentiality that ensures that, if a leader is helped to take a successful initiative, he or she can assume the credit for it, strengthening and reinforcing his or her credibility.

Context

Despite having a clear mandate from their electorates and at times even previous experience in public office, political leaders may often still benefit from the discreet advice of former leaders who themselves experienced similar challenges.

While GLF believes in the values of democracy, free markets and the rule of law, it comes with no agenda of its own, or of any government or organisation. The agenda is always set by the 'host' Head of Government, with Members offering impartial advice, given on a peer-to-peer basis, drawing on their own personal experience.

What kind of projects does GLF undertake?

GLF will consider requests from any leader seeking to improve the quality of life for his/her people.

Since its establishment in 2004, GLF has made a definable difference in over two dozen countries through its work on inter alia:

- Democratic institutions, effective governance, and transition from authoritarian rule
- Effective election management
- Regional and national security
- Political reconciliation and implementation of international agreements
- Tackling armed resistance movements and terrorist organisations
- Economic reform, resource management and trade
- Access to humanitarian aid

When specialist advice is required, such as in business, banking, finance and the law; the development and exploitation of power generation, mining and agricultural resources; or the adaptation to new technologies, GLF can mobilise outside expertise, drawing on its extensive network of partners and supporters.

Through its projects GLF has developed good relations with the World Bank, IMF, UNDP and many like-minded non-governmental organisations (NGOs) in the governance, conflict management and development fields.

Operating Principles

GLF can act on its own initiative, at the invitation of a host government needing advice, at the suggestion of another government, or in partnership with a UN body, international financial institution or like-minded NGO. However, in each case the concurrence of the host government is crucial.

The Foundation's core principles are discretion, trust, integrity, neutrality and independence, and it will only engage with opposition parties with the consent of the Head of Government.

GLF will not publicise the countries in which it operates unless a leader with whom it is working wishes to make GLF's involvement public.

How is GLF financed?

GLF is an independent, not-for-profit foundation, funded by corporations, foundations and private individuals. Those who donate above a minimum level are invited to join the GLF International Council.

GLF seeks to recover direct project costs from host governments and has previously received project funding from UNDP, the governments of Canada, Ireland, Finland and Switzerland, the Ford Foundation, the Netherlands Institute for Multiparty Democracy and the Community of Democracies.

GLF exercises careful judgement to ensure that it does not receive funds from any source which may damage its reputation for probity or its need to preserve the confidentiality and objectivity of its operations. To protect its independence, GLF will not accept support from any one source of more than 10% of its operating budget in any one year.

Members of the International Council can be as active as they wish; the group does not meet formally nor make collective decisions but may be consulted individually, by the CEO and Projects Director of GLF. Members of the International Council are invited to GLF's Annual Meetings where they can actively contribute their specialist knowledge to the Foundation's strategic direction, share their experience from the private sector, and participate in the discussions on GLF's possible contributions to the solution of complex problems.
